

260 - Notice material barely touches out feed and has a roller at the end of the out feed.

360 - has a longer out feed tray "without" a roller at the end. The material now has more surface contact and when the material has more contact it creates more surface tension that causes the material to bunch up and create a head crash.